regarding the fact that most startups don't require specific key partners when putting up because they deal in unknown and untested products. The Lean Canvas is also majorly meant for entrepreneurs and not the customers, consultants, investors or advisors. Because it was space constrained, Ash Maurya added more elements: Problem- a problem box was included because several businesses do fail applying a lot of effort, financial resources and time to build the wrong product. Cost structure In this field write down things you will have to pay for to bring the product to the client (e.g. salaries, cost of the materials, cost of maintenance). Key Metrics- a startup business can better focus on one metric and build on it. It deeply focuses on startup factors such as uncertainty and risk. (Fixed Cost) 2. (Variable Cost) 3. The metrics include the range of products or services you want to provide. It is therefore more target-specific and incorporates both small and large businesses effectively. 4. Lean Canvas promises an actionable and entrepreneur-focused business plan. (Total Cost) 5. Key Partners- Ash removed this category from the original Lean Canvas in an attempt to improve it. As such, it would be a waste of time trying to build such relationships. They had also been covered in the Solution box. 6. Channels 7. The structure is similar to the well-known Business Model Canvas, but some sections have been exchanged. For more information about the author of this canvas, please refer to the blogpost explaining Lean Canvas and the ideas behind it on his website: If you want to try it out without entering your email address, please use our public Lean Demo Canvas for a first impression.
